Everyday words in sentences

A blue notebook lies beside the window, with a pen resting on the open page.

I leave a little space for my cup and move

the lamp closer to the chair.

The room is quiet before the day begins,

and soft light reaches across the desk.

My keys and a folded map are ready by the door.

Before I leave, I close the notebook and put the pen in its case.

Sentences across a line

I open the gate and follow the narrow path beside the garden.

A bird moves between the branches above me, then settles on the fence.

Near the pond, a small wooden bridge leads towards a row of trees.

On the way back, I pass a neighbour carrying a basket of apples.

We stop for a brief chat before I return home for a warm drink.

A short message

Before lunch, I write a short note to my friend about our plans.

We will meet beside the library after work and walk to the park.

If rain begins, we can sit inside the cafe near the station.

I add the time at the bottom so the message is clear.

After reading it once more, I put the note where my friend can find it.

A place for a plant

I set a small plant beside the window, where it can catch the morning light. Each day, I turn the pot a little and check the soil. A new leaf has begun to open near the top. I move a book to give the plant more room and wipe a little dust from the shelf. When I finish, I take a step back and look at the quiet corner before returning to my desk.

Finding a useful note

I want to find a note I wrote last week.

Instead of searching through loose sheets,

I open my notebook and look for the date.

The note is beside a small drawing of the garden. It reminds me where I planned to put a new chair. I read the words once and add one thought beneath them. Then I mark the page with a ribbon so I can find the same place next time.

An ordinary afternoon

After a busy morning, I leave a little time for a walk. The street is quiet, and a light wind moves through the trees. On the way home, I stop beside the library and watch people come and go. A friend waves from across the street before turning towards the shops. Later, I write a few lines about the afternoon, using words that I can read again without guessing. I add the date and close my notebook.
